As to the practicability of the system, or any view we may entertain of the subject does not change, in the least, the fact, that our former system of labor is untergoing a complete revolution. The question we have to meet, is to make question we have to meet, is to make the prosperity of the past. Our present the prosperity of the past to terpresperity of the past. Our present the present to the place ourselves in order accordingly.

As to our relation with the General Government, it is simple and plain—We are restored to our former obligations and allegiance. True, some of the favorite political theories to which we adhered to in the past, have been submerged. The question of State Soverginy has been settled on the broader basis of sovereign nationality. Hence forth the States are integral parts of a Federal Head, and indivisible, by virtue of their essential existence to the life being of the whole.
